The Industrial System of Utah Was Founded by a Genius.

The Corner Stone of Brigham Young's State Was Industrialism - What He Did with the Problem of Irrigation.

In the bitter anti-Mormon crusades of the past it has been alleged that "Brigham Young had chains on men's souls." There is no doubt, writes William E. Smythe in Century, that religious superstition, rendered effective by the marvelous machinery of the church, was partly the source of the leader's irresistible power with his own E. D. He knew that his power, to be enduring, must rest upon something material and tangible; and this something he discerned to be the prosperit;

of prosperity. This was the real source of his strength. He did not aim at mere temporary prosperity. On the contrary, he fought everything that tended to that end, going to the length of actually forbidding the opening of the rich mines in the mountains near at hand, because he abhorred the spirit of speculation. He chose for the corner stone of his state the principle of industrialism; and that principle lies there yet, at the base of a noble edifice of economic fact, reared by human toil, and held firmly in place by the average prosperity of all who had part. in its building. If the great architect, and the superintendents and foremen who surrounded him, enjoyed a larger share of the profits than the workmen. it is also true that the humblest hewer of JOSEPH MARSHALL stone and carrier of mortar was paid in proportion to the importance of his 1004 KANSAS AVENUE labors. And what fair mind can object to an industrial system that yields

So far as can be learned, Brigham STEAM DYE CO., Young had no previous knowledge of irrigation when he entered Salt Lako valley. He quickly realized that he had come to an arid country which would be hopeless for agriculture unless artificially watered. With mar-, velous perception he saw that irrigation was not a drawback, but an advantage of the most important sort. He realized that it meant freedom alike from the dangers of the drought and of the flood. He discovered that, having a rich soil and ample sunshine, and add-City. City. Brigham Young also realized, almost at the first, that the necessity of careful irrigation largely nareased the labor upon an acre of land; but ht found that this labor was generously rewarded by the increased yield both in quantity and quality. And from this fact he drew the most important principle of his commonwealth, which was the division of land into small holdings. Closely related to this is the other twin factor in Mormon prosperity-the diversi-
